

THE BOTANIST

Roland Bonaparte was the great-nephew of Napoleon I. After the death of his wife, he decided to dedicate the time and money at his disposal to his passion: science. He had a predilection for geography in all its forms: cartography, geology, anthropology, natural sciences, and photography. He organised expeditions to Italy, Germany, Corsica, Lapland, North America from where he returned with a number of scientific objects and Napoleonic era souvenirs.

He became a member of dozens of scholarly societies (Académie des Sciences, Société Botanique de France, Société de Géographie) and from 1900 launched himself into his project of creating a comprehensive herbarium which contained “useful” plants from around the world. He managed to assemble in a few years the most important collection of dried plants ever assembled by acquiring the collections of the best botanists from the period by sending scientists to the end of the world and by getting in touch with all the colonial outposts, as his rich botanical correspondence perfectly highlights.

Roland never missed the chance to add to the collection himself, wherever he was: on an excursion, in congress, on holiday. He also grew thousands of varieties of useful plants (edible, dye or medicinal) in his garden at Saint-Cloud (the garden still exists today). Close to half of the species of flowers from around the world were also found in this incredibly vast collection, and many of the specimens are unique for science as they represent species which are otherwise extinct.

This is a detailed historical map of the Mediterranean region, likely from a 17th or 18th-century travelogue. The map is color-coded and includes numerous place names and geographical features. The top left corner features a decorative vignette of a figure, possibly a saint or a historical figure, holding a staff and a book. The map shows the Mediterranean Sea (MER MEDITERRANEE) and the surrounding landmasses. Key locations labeled include:

- Europe: France (FRANCE), Spain (ESPAÑA), Portugal (PORTUGAL), Italy (ITALIE), Greece (GRECE), Turkey (TURQUIE), and various islands like Sicily (SICILE) and Corsica (CORSE).
- North Africa: Morocco (MAROC), Algeria (ALGERIE), Tunisia (TUNISIE), and Egypt (EGYPTE).
- Central Africa: The map shows the Niger River (NIGER) and the region of NIGRITIE.
- South Africa: The map shows the Cape of Good Hope (CAP DE BONNE ESPERANCE) and the region of GUINEE.
- Geographical Features: The Tropic of Cancer (Tropique du Cancer) is marked. The map also shows the Strait of Gibraltar (Détroit de Gibraltar) and the Bosporus (Bosphore).
- Decorative Elements: The map is framed by a decorative border, and there are several small vignettes and illustrations, including a figure in the top left and a figure in the bottom right.
