

Serving the finest variety of teas at Shangri-La comes with observing the finest details. It starts by working closely with superior tea growers from the best tea-producing countries. Then specially sourcing the most exquisite tea leaves that are 100% naturally grown, without additives or artificial flavours. Most of all, they must come handpicked by master tea growers.

Because we firmly believe that only with such dedication and passion, can we truly honour the culture and heritage of tea, and offer a unique tea experience that is worthy of your appreciation.

Appreciating Tea

The Chinese believe balance in tea is based on two qualities: 苦 (bitter) and 甘 (sweet). A well-balanced tea has a mild bitter attack, but leaves a lingering sweet aftertaste. An unbalanced, poor quality or badly made tea will yield a taste that is too bitter or too sweet.

Smelling Tea

When tasting tea, you begin by inhaling the fragrance. This activates your olfaction, otherwise known as your sense of smell. The aromas pass through the nose and reach the sensors of the olfactory bulb, which provides the first impression of the bouquet. Once the tea liquor is in the mouth, retronasal olfaction or internal olfaction is activated by exhaling through your nose. The combination of both external and internal smell olfaction completes your tea aroma experience.

Tasting Tea

Our five senses; sweet, sour, bitter, salty, and umami (umami is a borrowed word from Japanese meaning “tasty”) are odourless. However, they serve to suppress or enhance the sensation of aromas through retro-olfaction. Temperature is very important for the perception of taste. Sweetness is enhanced when tea is very hot while the bitterness, saltiness and umami become less perceptible at high temperatures. Sourness remains fairly consistent in sensitivity across temperature variation. The flavour of tea is a complex perception obtained by combining the taste sensations perceived on the tongue (taste), the aromas perceived via the olfactory and retronasal routes (smell) and the tactile and thermal sensations perceived in the mouth (touch). All this sensory information reaches the brain without you being able to distinguish it. All this makes appreciating tea a magical experience, which we hope you will enjoy today!

The Rose Veranda Exclusive Signature Blends

The Rose Veranda Signature Blend

A blend of Nuwara Eliya and Dimbula tea from Ceylon, exquisitely flavoured with natural Soursop. The tea is highlighted with beautiful corn flower petals and the golden brew is mellow on the palate.

The natural taste of the Soursop fruit lingers in the mouth, along with its subtle tangy notes.
