A TIMELINE OF WHISKEY

- 2000 • Arguably, the art of distillation was founded in ancient Mesopotamia, often used as a way to produce perfumes and aromatics.
 - 100 • Here we find the first written record of distilling. Ancient Greek philosopher Alexandre of Aphrodisias describes the process of taking sea water and distilling it into pure drinking water.
 - 500-1000 • Knowledge of distillation spread to Europe along with the travelling Moors of the early first millennia. The process is picked up by those in the Christian religion, using it to produce ingredients for various ceremonies, and also medicines.
 - 1000-1200 • The origin of whisky began over 1000 year ago when distillation made the migration from mainland Europe into Scotland and Ireland via traveling monks. the Scottish and Irish monasteries, lacking the vineyards and grapes of the continent, turn to fermenting grain mash, resulting in the first distillations of modern whiskey.
 - 1405 • The first written record of 'whisky' appears in the Irish annals of Clonmacnoise, where it was written that the head of a clan died after 'taking a surfeit (excessive amount) of aqua vitae at Christmas.
 - 1494 • By the time, the distilling of whisky in Scotland is fully underway, as evident by a record in the Exchequer Rolls of 1494 where King James IV of Scotland granted a large amount of malt "To Friar John Cor, by order of the King, to make aquavitae".
 - 1536-1541 • The production of whisky shifted to the general public, after king Henry VIII of England dissolved the monasteries, making a large number of monks independent and looking for new ways to make a living, Distillation was it.
 - 1600-onwards • As the European colonists began to arrive in America, they brought with them the practice of distilling whiskey. many Scottish and Irish immigrants settled in their new territories, eventually beginning to distill their types of grains and mash.
